"Life's more than breath, and the quickround of blood,
It is a great spirit, and a busy heart.
We live in days, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial."

To Lizzie.

Kidst all the dear, and valued ones who claim
A kind remembrance in your tender breast,
Dear friend, I fain would have my name,
By memory's hand inscribed among the rest—
And when in future years, though far away
And many kindly whispered words of praise;
Or when the untiring powers of memory
Lose to recall the scenes of bygone days—
Deign to bestow a passing thought on me,
However blessed may be thy happy lot,
And if thou art clouded in adversity;
Kidst thoughts of dearer friends forget me not."

Passing through life's field of action,
Lest we part before its end,
Take within your modest volume
This memento from a friend.

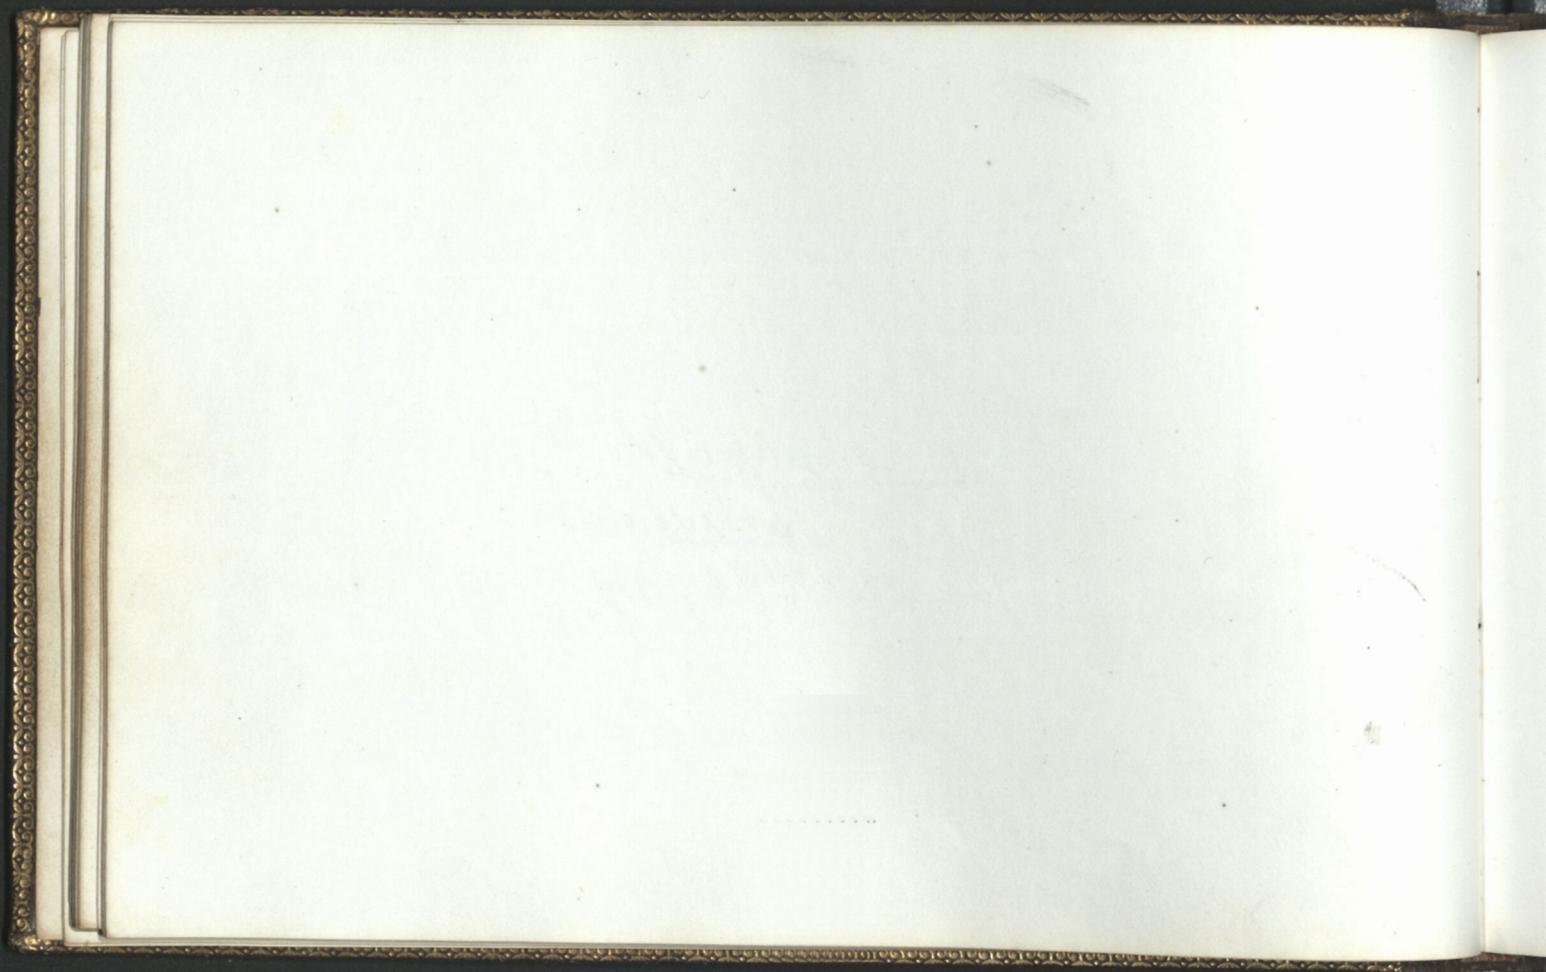

Passing through it, may we ever
Friends continue as begun;
And till death shall part us, never
May our friendship cease to burn.

How vain are words the ties to tell
That heart to heart may bind;
The strange, mysterious, mighty spell,
Of mind on kindred mind!
The light that conce the soul to fill
In friendship's altar shed,
That cheers the drooping spirit still,
When days, ay, years have fled!

And oh, when death's cold hand hath tom
The breath of friendship from
And on the chaplet they who mourn
Boston - the bitter tear;
Her sweetly faithful triumphant cried
Exulting o'er the sod;
Friendship is endles; in the skies
With fond ones gone to God!"

Dear Lizzie

When years have rolled o'er thee, and summers have fled,
And this comes before thee, like one from the dead:
When these scenes and these days, shall be past and afar,
Let them live in the blaze of bright Memory's star.

When friends long departed, before thee appear,
And the gay, and warm hearted, in fancy are near,
When all fond things together, remembrance shall bring,
For me let one feather be plucked from thee wing."

To Lizzie.

How sweet the tones of Friendship,
When borne from heart to heart.
Upon life's varying breezes,
Which joy and grief impart!

When soul with soul aspiring,
Are these gloomy shades.
And eyes with joy admiring
That crown which never fades,
What, then, though death should threaten
To make us soon his prey
With prospecte bright for heaven.
We'd gladly soar away.

Dear Lizzie -

May your pathway here in life always be as bright and sunny as this summer day.
But if clouds gather: if we but have faith
to look beyond, where lies unseen - unknown the great reality, we shall surely find a silver lining.

Yours very truly your friend
